

Kristen Baum DeBeasi

Jennifer Browne

Peter Cashorali

Sarah CR Clark

Chris Cottom

Susan Coultrap-McQuin

Jo Angela Edwins

Arvilla Fee

Dagne Forrest

Aimee Green

Jan Hassmann

Lana Hechtman Ayers

Hilary King

Dorian Kotsiopolous

Tova Kranz

Peggy Landsman

Susanna Lang

Daniel Lassell

Nissa Lee

Kindra McDonald

Matt McGee

Jeannie Prinsen

Robin Turner

Pat Valdata

submission guidelines

Our submissions are open the full months of October,

January, April and July of each year.

- We welcome work on any subject, including and beyond works celebrating reading, libraries, and books.
- New and established writers are welcome. 18 years or older, please.
- Please find our full submission guidelines on our website.

LittleFreeLitMag.com

editor-in-chief SARAH ANN WINN

editor TWILA LIGITT

production manager GREGORY LUCE

ALEXIS M. COLLAZO

pdf design

ALANA TORREZ

web design

ALEXIS M. COLLAZO

readers

SARAH DEWEERDT

SHERRY EASTWOOD

EMILY PATTERSON

ALANA TORREZ

PAM WINTERS

Copyright (c) 2024 Little Free Lit Mag

The creative work in this issue are works of fiction. Names, characters, places, events, and incidents are products of the authors' imagination or used in a fictitious manner. Any resemblance to actual persons, living or dead, or to actual events is entirely coincidental. The views expressed in this magazine do not necessarily reflect those of its editors or sponsors.

Cover image:

Photo by Fujiphilm on Unsplash

Not affiliated with Little Free Library®

about us

Susanna Lang's chapbook, Like This, was released in 2023 (Unsolicited Books), along with her translation of poems by Souad Labbize, My Soul Has No Corners (Diálogos Books). Her fourth full-length collection is forthcoming from Cornerstone Press.

Daniel Lassell is the author of two poetry books: Frame Inside a Frame and Spit, winner of the Wheelbarrow Books Poetry Prize. His most recent chapbook, The Emptying Earth, was a finalist for the Medal Provocateur Award. He grew up in Kentucky and lives in Indiana. Visit his website: www.daniel-lassell.com.

Nissa Lee lives and writes in Maryland. Her work has appeared in Stirring, Philadelphia Stories, Cleaver Magazine, and other journals, and she was the co-host of Morgendorks: A Daria Podcast. She has an MFA from Rutgers University–Camden.

Kindra McDonald is the author of the collections Teaching a Wild Thing, Fossils, and In the Meat Years. She received her MFA from Queens University of Charlotte and is a poet artist working and teaching in mixed-media and found poetry. You can find her in the woods or at www.kindramcdonald.com

Matt McGee writes in the Los Angeles area. In 2024 his work appeared in Four Feathers, Last Stanza, and Non-Binary Review. When not typing, he drives around in rented cars and plays goalie in local hockey leagues.

Jeannie Prinsen lives with her husband, daughter, and son in Kingston, Ontario. Her writing has appeared in Dust Poetry, Juniper Poetry, Reckon Review, and elsewhere. Find her online at jeannieprinsen.substack.com and jeannieprinsen.bsky.social.

Robin Turner's poems, prose poems, and flash fiction have appeared in DMQ Review, Rattle, Rust + Moth, The Texas Observer, and elsewhere. Her chapbooks are bindweed & crow poison (Porkbelly Press) and Elegy with Clouds & (Kelsay Books). She is a community teaching artist in Dallas, Texas.

Pat Valdata's poetry manuscript about women aviation pioneers, Where No Man Can Touch, won the Donald Justice Poetry prize in 2015. A revised edition was published in 2023 by Wind Canyon Books. Her work has appeared in literary magazines including Ecotone, Little Patuxent Review, North American Review, Passager, and Valparaiso Poetry Review. www.patvaldata.com

Little Free Lit Mag is a journal founded with the aim of publishing quality short form writing. Like “little” pockets of kindness which exist solely to help one another, we think small works can have a big impact. Our mission is to celebrate our wonderfully diverse world of writers and readers by reaching them wherever they are.

Each issue is published both online and as a PDF, each available for free. We hope readers like you will help bring our lit mag to any place someone might enjoy finding a bite sized read.

Share it with friends! Keep a copy for yourself! Pass it into the hands of a kindred spirit who might like it! Please visit our website if you'd like to download the free pdf to this issue to keep, print, or share.

Made to Share

contents

At the Year's First Outdoor	Sarah CR Clark	3
Farmers Market
Derivation	Nissa Lee	4
Always in My Pockets	Hilary King	5
Commuter	Pat Valdata	6
Reprieve	Arvilla Fee	7
Tidal Spring Redux	Tova Kranz	8
Common Reed	Kindra McDonald	9
Rescue	Susanna Lang	10
The Ordinary Ones	Susan Coultrap-McQuin	12
Proverbially	Hilary King	13
The Poems You Have Yet to Write	Jo Angela Edwins	14
Gaze	Lana Hechtman Ayers	15
A Gift You Can't Refuse	Matt McGee	16
Not Carl Sandburg's Fog	Peggy Landsman	18
Domestic Gravity	Dagne Forrest	19
Pseudacris crucifer	Jennifer Browne	20
Spider Plants	Aimee Green	21
Mirror	Robin Turner	22
Naked	Dorian Kotsiopolous	23
Eventual Light	Daniel Lassell	24
buddies	Jan Hassmann	25
This world is a single green leaf,	Peter Cashorali	26
Smile	Jeannie Prinsen	27
Flight	Kristen Baum DeBeasi	28
We Put the Chickens Away Last	Jo Angela Edwins	29
Night and Couldn't Find Grace

Dagne Forrest has recent work in The Inflectionist Review, Pinhole Poetry, The New Quarterly, deceember magazine, Unlost, and Sky Island Journal. She belongs to Painted Bride Quarterly's senior editorial and podcast teams. Her debut chapbook will be published by Baseline Press in spring 2025.

Aimee Green is a graduate of the University of Birmingham, UK, with an MA in Creative Writing. Her poetry has been published in Cool Beans Lit, Eunoia Review, and as a daily offering on Poetry Breakfast. She also shares poetry on her site aimeegreenwriter.wordpress.com.

Jan Hassmann first studied and then taught English Literature at universities far from home. He has recently returned to Europe, where he runs an amicable poetry club in Plovdiv, Bulgaria. His poetry and prose have appeared in WireWorm Magazine, Stone Circle Review, Sparks of Calliope, Poem Alone, and others.

Lana Hechtman Ayers has shepherded over a hundred thirty poetry volumes into print in her role as managing editor for three small presses. Her work appears in Rattle, The London Reader, Peregrine, and elsewhere. Her newest collection is The Autobiography of Rain (Fernwood Press, 2024). Visit her online at LanaAyers.com.

Originally from the Blue Ridge mountains of Virginia, Hilary King is a poet now living in the San Francisco Bay Area of California. Her poems have appeared in Ploughshares, TAB, Salamander, Belletrist, Fourth River, and other publications. Her book Stitched on Me was published by Riot in Your Throat Press in 2024. She loves hiking, travel, and ribbon.

Dorian Kotsiopolous' work has appeared in journals, including A Certain Age, Poet Lore, Salamander, JAMA, On the Seawall, Rogue Agent, Smartish Pace, and Third Wednesday as well as in the All Poems Are Ghosts (Tiny Wren Lit) anthology. She is a reviewer for the Bellevue Literary Review.

Tova Kranz earned degrees from Florida State University and the University of Louisiana at Lafayette. Her work has been nominated for the Pushcart Prize and Best of the Net, and has appeared in Blue Heron Review and 86 Logic, among others. She writes about farming and growing on Substack.

Peggy Landsman is the author of the full-length poetry collection, Too Much World, Not Enough Chocolate (Nightingale & Sparrow Press, 2024), and the poetry chapbook Our Worlds (Kelsay Books, 2021). She lives in South Florida with in an easy drive of a beautiful beach and a good library. To learn more about her work, visit: peggylandsmansman.wordpress.com

contributors

Kristen Baum DeBeasi writes poems, stories, and music. She has poems in Blue Heron Review, The Muleskinner Journal, and elsewhere. She is a Best of the Net nominee and Editor-in-Chief of The Fairy Tale Magazine. As a composer, she loves setting fairy tale poems to music. Find her at www.kbdebeasi.com.

Jennifer Browne falls in love easily with other people's dogs. She is the author of American Crow (Beltway Editions, 2024) and some other stuff, too. Find her at linktr.ee/jenniferabrowne or drinking coffee at Clatter in Frostburg, MD.

Peter Cashorali is a neurodivergent queer psychotherapist in private practice in Portland and Los Angeles. Recent work occurs or is upcoming in Synkroniciti, Midwest Zen, Braided Way, Gas Journal, and Brief Wilderness. Earlier work is Gay Fairy Tales (HarperSanFrancisco:1995) and Gay Folk and Fairy Tales (Faber and Faber:1997).

Sarah CR Clark is a writer and former Lutheran pastor living in Minnesota. She is a winner of the St. Paul Sidewalk Poetry Contest and has published poetry in the St. Paul Almanac; newspaper articles in the Park Bugle; and theological writings with Augsburg Fortress Press. A certified Master Naturalist, she can often be found adventuring with her family near Lake Superior.

Susan Coultrap-McQuin is a retired educator. Her poems have appeared in journals such as The Dewdrop, Quiet Diamonds, The Poeming Pigeon, Plant People, Still Point Arts, and Green Ink Poetry, and in several anthologies. Her chapbook, What We Bring Home (The Poetry Box, 2021), is a collection of travel poems.

Jo Angela Edwins is the poet laureate of the Pee Dee region of South Carolina. She is the author of the collection A Dangerous Heaven (2023) and the chapbooks Play (2016) and Bitten (forthcoming 2025). She lives in Florence, SC, where she teaches literature and writing at Francis Marion University.

Arvilla Fee has been published in numerous presses, and her poetry books, The Human Side, This is Life, and Mosaic: A Million Little Pieces are available on Amazon. Arvilla's life advice: Never travel without snacks. To learn more, visit her website and her new magazine: <https://soulpoetry7.com/>

Sarah CR Clark

At the Year's First Outdoor Farmers Market

Spring is exploding with asparagus
In the North, winter's menu has finally expired Now old men dive into buckets of red rhubarb Sun-starved and ravenous for fresh pea pods

We trade winter's northern menu for Baskets of living mizuna, arugula, spinach Overflowing pea pods flirt with thawing senses
I am seduced by radishes

Dizzied by deep baskets of leafy green Piles of wild ramps tamed across table tops near Yet more radishes
And the spring wind's whispered promises

Emerald and crimson garlicky ramps in my hand and Women too now bury themselves in rhubarb The rushing warm winds of Spring and its exploding asparagus

Nissa Lee

Derivation

Less than one percent of Earth's water is potable. Drinkable.
The fact leaves me thirsty, and searching the internet for water filtration systems.
Potable comes from Old French comes from the Latin potare.
Related to potion and poison.
Ninety-nine percent of Earth's water is poison to me. Salty or swimming with bacteria.
My kid has been coughing all winter.
I've brewed teas and poured thick syrups onto spoons. Transformed water into eucalyptus mist. Suctioned snot and sprayed salt. Parent is derived from potion maker. I incant, here, drink this, as the ocean creeps closer to our door.

Jo Angela Edwins

We Put the Chickens Away Last Night and Couldn't Find Grace

--first sentence of a social media post and we led the cows to the barn and lost all hope, and while latching the horse stalls we looked for love, but it was nowhere to be found, even in the pen where the pigs grunted sleepily no matter the absence of peace, and the geese in their usual corners settled down to rest, certain none of us would find contentment, and the donkey, who hoarded humility, suggested we were fools to search for joy, until at last we left the farmyard, humans weary and trudging slowly until we stumbled on mercy, which leapt gladly into our hands.

Kristen Baum DeBeasi

Flight

An enthusiasm of pigeons takes to air, wings beating a bravi, bravi a grazie for the crumbs cast by passing hand of human with the eyes to see the exultant chorus, to witness the joy of gathering, congregating, murmuring, the simple pleasure of soaring

Hilary King

Always In My Pockets

Envy slept in this morning, and I let her.
I walk through our apartment, drinking peppermint tea, the bright scent filling the high ceilings of our small rooms.
Later, over wine and take-out, I'll tell Envy everything. Wait—Maybe I'll cook. Crepes, because when I'm not jealous, I'm French.
Or British and brainy or still American, but younger, taller, blonder, not bogged down, in my pockets a stone for everything I want but lack.

Pat Valdata

Computer

Tardy sun gilds the silver queen while Tina sings soft and rough. I didn't catch enough z's, so Rise Up Coffee comes to my rescue.

My spirits should rise up with each sip, but I am not morning's minion. I slip on oversize sunglasses against the morning's glare.

Sixteen ounces later, I still want to doze. But the light catches up to the coming workday like a snooze alarm, irritating me to wake the heck up already. Annual cicadas strum zee-zee-zee while Waze's British lady voice directs me to the E-Zed pass lane, missing the pun.

No fun.

Jeannie Prinsen

Simile

Darting from bush to tree, the cardinal looks like a scarlet fish swimming through blue water, its wings a blur of fins. Wind rustling in treetops sometimes sounds like new rain.
For a few moments at least, dawn can be mistaken for twilight.
Things resemble other things, that's no surprise. But in the end, we need to know what it is, not what it's like – if morning's coming sooner or later, if our lungs are filling with air or water. We can only tell ourselves we're laughing, not crying, for so long.

Peter Cashorali

This world is a single green leaf,

As vast as fragile,
As present as unlikely,
Growing by the side
Of one of its own roads,
Its root hid under Our amazement,
That someone we knew Once told us about,
That we took on faith or not Until we saw it
First time ourselves.

Arvilla Fee

Reprieve

I sink into the sofa, letting my arms fall limply to each side.
Head back,
eyes closed
I breathe in the stillness, allowing it to fill my lungs.
Upon release,
I feel the tension leave my body,
the pressing weight
of children,
today's dinner menu,
dishes—laundry.
In that one moment,
I let it all go—ease my shoulders
down, tell myself
it's OK to be still,
to simply exist in this tiny pocket of time.

Tova Kranz

Tidal Spring Redux

The sun is high already: the sky cloudless blue with the crisscross contrails, the sun glints off passenger planes and C-130s.
Garden, mound of woodchips, and palm trees glow.
The moon is faint and shimmers over a live oak branch; over the pluff mud the moon is a shrinking wedge drawing water back over the tidal river banks. Leaves and ripening seed pods of argula fling themselves from trellises. The mud and the mist and the morning all say the same thing: you are here, now act like it.

Jan Hassmann

buddies

the average lifespan of a taste bud is ten days yet bitterness stays and stays
and stays

Daniel Lassell

Eventual Light

Though the dawn anticipates blessing the shed's glossed shovel, the packets of waiting seeds seethe, dropped into empty pots along the shed's exterior.

Another day and they are again to witness the morning's warmth, victims of procrastination.
Where is the gardener?
Drinking coffee on the porch again?
The seeds, eager for burial, desire the crisp soil to coax them into their realized selves.

The sunlight's boisterous arrival, the seeds think, seems arrogant to emblazon the morning with cheery outlook, droplets on the nearby grass evaporating without sound or taste.
Droplets, they could be drinking.

Kindra McDonald

Common Reed

For a season, I spend every day on phragmites control, carrying a 3-gallon pack of herbicide on my back.
Sloshing through swamps in brutal heat, this physical, thankless work with no instant gratification, a lesson.
This is the most important labor—what crowds out beauty never truly goes away, all you can do is mitigate damage.
Rhizomes produce roots and offspring even if broken from the parent plant. If left unchecked, a wall so dense will decimate a wetland and endanger the wildlife habitat.
I build on decades of effort, the steady undoing of damage to come, slow and necessary, I peel back the light, see the water flow, the hard change takes more time.

Rescue

A storm blew in as we arrived at our neighbors' door—welcoming us, they forgot that they'd left their baby rabbit, caged, in the garden. They'd found her burrowed into their blanket during an outdoor concert. Now, a small handful of wet fur clinging to me, her head was silky between the small ears as the fur dried.

The sky was blue, then it wasn't. Trees whirled to distant thunder. If our neighbors let this young one go tomorrow, would she remember how to be wild? Is wildness something her mother would have taught her, or was it born in her?

Women in straw hats cast lines from the river's edge as a rabbit hops out of my path. Old enough to distrust my overtures.

The neighbors don't want to let the tiny creature go, afraid the coyotes would get her. On this street, every garden has its rabbits, eating their way through lettuce and eggplants, even peppers. Dahlias. The occasional weed. Coyotes don't catch them all.

Naked

After my mother-in-law lost her grip in the bathtub, after the surgery to patch her fractured hip, after we moved her to the Copley nursing facility, suddenly, she loved me. She forgot that I was not of her village or religion, that I breastfed her grandchildren. She'd kick her husband out of her tiny shared room, and announce, "Girls only!" I loved the communal dressing room feel, as her layers fell away like yesterday's clothes, as she showed herself in peeks and flashes. How her eyes would grow when I walked in. She'd grab my hand.
 She wouldn't let go.

Robin Turner

Mirror

a golden shovel after Stevie Nicks

Oh
the sound any mirror makes. Mother's face in my own now, the same clouds crowd my sky mind soft with blue grey. And what of all my impossible hungers. My mouth is moon-round, open, still speaking what I know of love.

Note: Line from "Landslide"

Autumn clematis fragrant with last evening's rain.
Three stone rabbits play among late-blooming asters, not afraid of coyote.

Maybe the little one will grow up to feast on what we plant. Maybe not.

Susan Coultrap-McQuin

The Ordinary Ones

Praise the Ditch Lilies' existence the optimistic orange ones always reaching for sun, always adding vibrance to their place.
Praise their calm endurance despite sneers by master gardeners being moved by haughty towns in search of a fancier look.
Praise their ordinary persistence growing wherever they can not bothered by anonymity happy to mix with leaves and grass.
Yes, praise all ordinary resilience of those overlooked, though in sight—friends with bouquets for the grieving neighbors who bloom in your life.

12

Little Free Lit Mag

Aimee Green

Spider Plants

In the upstairs bathroom, on the sill, is the mother. Graceful, a spill of green; leaves and stems and growth. Her children, collected by her side, pushing outwards:
limbs floundering and searching for space to root and be.
Clinging to her sleeves, protected — or protecting? She blooms, creates them all for herself — an abundance — some so small they peek from between the strands of her, waiting; for the day they may become her, as she did before them.

21

Little Free Lit Mag

Jennifer Browne

Pseudacris crucifer

Spring Peeper

A storm starts, flashing lightning, thunder, heavy rain, and somehow, still, I hear the chorus of peepers, think of clouds moving over the land between us. My grandmother said lightning was good for plants, would carry pots out to the porch to charge their particles. I wait for one of us to say something, flash-imagine a lightningstrike, my grandmother in her housedress, lashed by wind, trying-tending-loving into growth. I worry for the tender shoots of what you're feeling, what will bloom.
Peepers time their breeding to coincide with rain or cloudy weather, fix their eggs like seed pearls to a blade of pond grass. Here, having heard their voices, I imagine their eyes lit, glowing for a fraction of a second after each white bolt-flash. In this swirl of love and fear, nurturing and growth, even the species map is darker in the places where we are, these little frogs with crosses on their backs call out for someone. Let me move across this distance, I hope is only ever geographic, light the darkness with some brilliant shape.

Hilary King

Proverbially

The apple doesn't fall far from a thousand words.
A bird in the hand is thicker than water.
Beggars can't keep the doctor away.
Necessity begins with a single step.
When in Rome, before they hatch birds of a feather spoil.
Time is mightier.

Jo Angela Edwins

The Poems You Have Yet to Write

sleep comfortably in tall evergreens beyond your line of sight.
God-like, they are there, you know it, but you cannot touch them, do not always trust them, often believe they are figments of your imagination, which, of course, they are. Most days, like death, they never cross your mind, but when they do, like love, they bring you hope—ripe, honeyed pears bathed in sunlight on a golden plate.
On better days, you wait for them, knowing in the vessel of your heart that they will awaken, one by one, yes, they will stretch and descend to you, they will fall like unexpected kisses upon the palms of your grateful hands.

Dagne Forrest

Domestic Gravity

For such a big creature, my dog loves to go small, loading himself gingerly into the tightest of spaces, a sleek, furred missile. Underfoot, he'll shimmy and haul himself over the dusty carpet. The cats' blank faces ignored as he locks into place, slips a sigh or sigh at the living room's stale entropy. Slowly, a hum, barely there, encircles his barrel form. Soon enough, he's asleep, and I push aside the cold coffee, thumb through the dense pile of work just waiting to be read as the room's potential energy builds right where I sit.
He flexes a black paw, shifts, unaware of how wed my own escape missions are with his. In my schemes, it is always the same: find a flaw in gravity's plan, grab his collar, and we blow this popsize stand.

Peggy Landsman

Not Carl Sandburg's Fog

The fog is heavy inside me today.
Imagine an elephant the size of the moon!

That's how heavy the fog.

And when it lifts and lets its feet fall two at a time, two at a time, the footprints that follow eclipse my mind's eyes.

Blindly, I finger the holes in the heavens that let my thinking worlds through.

Oh for a peanut! Oh for a tent!
An elephant driver next door!

Lana Hechtman Ayers

Gaze

a haibun

When the moon rises above the horizon, casts its pearlescent glow, no one complains that its light is second-hand.

every face
you meet your own

A Gift You Can't Refuse

The fog always settles over the street this time of night, just after 2:30 am. The neighborhood is asleep. Most won't notice the little red Ford putter down the street, whining in a voice only a manual transmission can speak. The car is almost polite in its movement, gliding along damp pavement, its headlights cutting the fog, seeking the little mounted box on a pole.

Most drivers for hire go straight home after the bars have closed and the last drunken reveler has weaved to their front door, keyed a lock, and put another night behind them. Their last sight is the little red car that delivered them, departing with finality.

Most passers-by don't see the box on the pole. The driver rolls up to the sanctuary, obscured by thriving, scented vegetation. He shuts off the engine and gets out. Sage. That's what that is. Pungent almost year-round, he now associates the smell with the thrill of discovery and the joy of reading.

His luck is good tonight. There's a hardbound copy of a 1998 Robert Parker novel. He hasn't read this one. The joy of the find. He sets his slightly used copy of Catch-22 into the new gap and returns to the car.

Through the pandemic, this little box kept him alive. His business suffered, of course, as fewer and fewer parties ventured out. Oh, the lifers found a way, and they still called. But ever since that period, the after-parties and raging til sunrise has mostly stopped.

There's a favorite gas station across town, a Chevron that keeps its bays well-lit, staffed by employees who don't mind his parking at a far pump to borrow the light. If someone calls, he might go, but they better have a good story – better than Parker's anyway, because it's now after three in the morning, the fog has settled like a blanket over the town, and that perfect quiet is a gift he can't refuse.